MEMORANDUM FOR: D/OGI, DI

FROM: DCI

SUBJECT: 24 October Conference

This is the talk which Leo Cherne plans to give at the meeting in New York this Friday. It seems a little broad and general and elementary to me but before passing judgment on it I want to read again the basic paper on which this conference, as I understand it, is based. Meanwhile, I would like for you to read it and give me your judgment.

William J. Casey

The Honorable William J. Casey
Director of Central Intelligence

Dear Bill:

The enclosed text is the one I prepared for [redacted] meeting. STAT
It understandably makes only marginal comment on the effect of structural change on the Soviet Union. You will, however, notice in my urging that the precise nature of structural change be understood, that I put my total weight on the computer, the increasingly potent microprocessor, and when I make my comments at the Airlie House conference, I will especially concentrate on the by-product of both of these, the revolution in telecommunications, and, of course, not devote the extensive attention to structural change per se which is appropriate to the OGI meeting, but not yours.

In your meeting, however, I do have some very decided thoughts about the effect of the Soviet Union's economic difficulties and its policy to meet new challenges or, even ultimately, survive.

See you.

Cordially,

Leo Cherne
